

Abstract

The object of this invention is to provide a mascara case having a case body and a cap. The case with a spring-loaded mascara brush, is constructed so that a brush stem
5 (43) coupled to the cap moves downward by a predetermined length when the cap is separated from the case body (10) to open the case body, thus allowing a user to easily use a small amount of mascara remaining in a bottom of the case body without the necessity of completely closing the cap,
10 and the brush stem coupled to the cap moves upward when the cap is put on the case body to close the case body, thus preventing a brush from touching the bottom of the case body.